Copenhagen, June 9.

On the 6th Inſtant, between Three and Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, a dreadful Fire broke out in the Dock-Yard of this City, which ſoon communicated acroſs the Canal to the Houſes in the Town, and ſhortly after to one of the principal Churches. The Fire, driven with Violence from theſe different Places, continued to rage with great Fury for Forty-eight Hours, but was at length ſtopped, in conſequence of the Houſes immediately in the Line of it's Direction having been pulled down. It is computed that One-fourth Part of the City has been conſumed by this Calamity, rendered the more dreadful from the Circumſtance of the Quarter which has been burned having been the moſt populous. Every poſſible Attention has been ſhewn, on the Part of the Government, for the Relief of the Sufferers; and the Number of Lives loſt is ſuppoſed not to be conſiderable. The Royal Family was in the Country; the Prince Royal, however, immediately came to Town, and paſſed the whole Night in the Streets, giving Orders, and encouraging the Firemen and others who were employed, and even affording his perſonal Aſſiſtance, at the imminent Hazard of his Life.
